

Remarkable Trials for Curious Cases.

Judge McAdam Writes of Celebrated Cases Involving Novel Points of Law and Establishing Precedents for All Time.

In all the world there is no greater curiosity shop than the vast collection of legal records in which are to be read the stories of notable trials.

Some criminal cases are considered remarkable because of peculiar incidents connected with the crime, the prominence of the parties concerned, the great time spent in reaching a conclusion, or on account of some unusual outcome of the trial. But most of these cases, interesting and exciting while they last, fade from memory as the footprints of the traveler upon the sands; for they are no sooner ended than the kaleidoscope brings to view something more novel in their places, and in this manner new ideas supply the curious and morbid, ever interested in sensationalism, with material for gossip.

Other criminal trials are termed remarkable because they have settled legal principles which will stand as beacon lights for all time, as a guide through the rocks and shoals which must be avoided in conducting criminal prosecutions or in enacting statutes affecting the punishment of criminals; and these cases will never cease to be instructive, because inseparable from the public weal.

It seems to the ordinary citizen that he should meet with swift retribution; the only way to deter men from crime is to demonstrate that justice is both swift and certain. Technicians, however, look upon things to be observed and brushed aside, and any countenance given to them by the courts is regarded as an indication of feeling in favor of the prisoner.

Our Court of Appeals has held that the State—the public—has an interest in the preservation of the liberties and the lives of the citizens, and will not allow them to be taken away "without due process of law." Read the Constitution, article 1, section 6. When forfeited, these lives and liberties may be, as a punishment for crimes, impartial prosecutions proceed on the assumption of such a forfeiture, which, to sustain them, must be ascertained and declared as the law has prescribed.

The great Blackstone, in volume 4 of his works, page 180, says: "The king has an interest in the preservation of all subjects." And again (vol. 1, p. 133): "Natural law being the immediate donation of the great Creator, cannot legally be disposed of by any individual, neither by the person himself nor by any other of his fellow creatures, merely upon their own authority."

It is for these reasons that courts have established and now almost invariably deem it a plea of guilty to an indictment for murder, upon the ground that the prisoner cannot consent to the taking of his life; although it is common to accept pleas of guilty in manslaughter cases. Indeed, section 332 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as amended in 1888, expressly provides: "But no conviction shall be had upon a plea of guilty in either of the following cases:

"(a) Where the crime charged is punishable by death, or

"(b) Where the crime charged is or may be punishable by imprisonment in a State prison for the term of life."

The highest term of imprisonment for manslaughter is twenty years.

THIRD BY ELEVEN JURORS.

In the case of the People vs. Caneclini (7 Abb. Pr. 271) the prisoner was on trial for shooting a police officer. Upon the trial, in June, 1886, one of the jurors was taken ill, and it was suggested that the parties proceed with the remaining eleven. A consent in writing was drawn and signed by the prisoner, as well as his counsel. In the following words: "In open court this 12th day of June, of the June term aforesaid, in the year aforesaid, the counsel, on the part of the defendant, having suggested for the court their wish and that of the defendant that one of the jurors imprisoned in the case, Frederick Muller, should be permitted to withdraw from the jury, the Attorney General assenting to the suggestion, therefore, the said defendant, Michael Caneclini, now in his proper person, here in open court aforesaid, does consent that the said juror, Frederick Muller, be withdrawn from actual service in the jury, and that the verdict in this cause be rendered by and taken from the remaining eleven jurors, and that the twelve names now appearing on the panel of the jury in this cause may remain, and that by the record this cause shall appear to have been tried by twelve jurors."

The trial thereupon proceeded and Caneclini was, by the verdict of the jury, convicted of the murder charged, and sentence of death was thereafter pronounced. When arraigned for sentence the prisoner was asked the usual question, "What have you to say by way of judgment of death should not be pronounced against you according to law?" Whereupon, after proclaiming his innocence of the crime, he assigned as a reason that he was tried by a tribunal unknown to the common law and the Constitution, namely by eleven jurors and not twelve. The objection was overruled and the Court of Appeals, upon a writ of error, reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial upon the ground that the case being a capital one the prisoner was entitled as of right to a common law jury of twelve, and that he had no power to waive this constitutional right, and that the verdict was without warrant in law.

In the People vs. Hartung (22 N. Y. 85) the accused was convicted for the murder of her husband by administering poison; he died on April 21, 1888. The conviction was affirmed by the General Term and a writ of error allowed to the Court of Appeals. After the return of the writ, which was made February 14, 1890, and previous to the argument, namely April 14, 1890, an act passed the Legislature in relation to capital punishment. The court held that in consequence of this new legislation changing the mode of punishment the judgment of the Supreme Court should be reversed and a new trial was accordingly ordered. This case illustrates the danger of changing criminal statutes without some saving clause as to past offenses.

And what about drunkenness as an excuse for crime?

DRUNKENNESS AS A DEFENSE.

In the People vs. Rogers (18 N. Y. 9) and the People vs. Kenney (31 N. Y. 330)

California was sentenced to imprisonment. According to the usual custom the prison authorities proceeded to cut off his queue, whereupon the prisoner applied for an injunction, upon the ground that without this appendage he could not enter the kingdom of Heaven, and that his religious rights were sacred under the Constitution of the United States. The matter finally found its way to the United States Supreme Court, and that court determined that when a person is confined in a State prison he does not carry with him these religious liberties, and that the prisoner must therefore share the fate of his comrades, whatever the result in the world to come.

In the case of Hamer vs. Sidway (124 N. Y. 538) a man agreed with his nephew that if the nephew would refrain from drinking liquor, using tobacco, swearing and playing cards and billiards for money until he should become twenty-one years of age the uncle would pay him $5,000. The young man performed his part of the agreement, and it was held that the agreement was valid and enforceable against the estate of the uncle.

The court said: "The promisee (the nephew) used tobacco, occasionally drank liquor, and he had a legal right to do so. That right he abandoned for a period of years upon the strength of the promise of the testator (the uncle) that for such forbearance he would give him $5,000. We need not speculate on the effort which may have been required to give up the use of those stimulants. It is sufficient to say that he restricted his lawful freedom of action within certain prescribed limits upon the faith of his uncle's agreement, and now having fully performed the conditions imposed, it is of no moment whether such performance actually proved a benefit to the promisee (the nephew), and the Court will not inquire into it, but were it a proper subject of inquiry we see nothing in this record that would permit a determination that the uncle was not benefited in a legal sense. Numerous illustrations of the application of the legal principle involved are given, and the case is quite interesting.

Here is another odd question which required legal decision to settle it. A man would naturally suppose he has a right to use his own name without being challenged, but the courts have been called upon to decide numerous questions on this point. Thus, in the case of Meneely vs. Meneely (62 N. Y. 427) it appeared that Andrew Meneely, the father of the plaintiff and of the defendant, was engaged in the business of selling church and other bells at West Troy, N. Y., and that his son Edwin A. Meneely entered into partnership with him, and on the death of the father continued the business in his own name. Subsequently Clinton H. Meneely, the defendant, commenced a similar business in the same name, and the action was to enjoin the use of the name Meneely in the defendant's business. By the will of Andrew Meneely the name Meneely as a trade mark in the business passed to the plaintiff.

The court held that the defendant had a right to use the name so long as he did not by any contrivance induce the belief that he was the successor of Andrew Meneely, and numerous illustrations of the rule are given. DAVID McADAM.

WHEELS FOR SHOP GIRLS.

A Charitable Project That Would Bring Health and Strength to the Toilers.

The question of giving their last season's bicycles to the working girls is just now agitating the charitable society dames and dandies who are addicted to the use of the wheel.

In England the plan has found ready favor, and many a hard worked shop and factory girl finds relaxation and health after the hours of work in taking country spins on a wheel which was the gift of some charitable woman in better financial circumstances than herself. For some time past the question has been discussed in all its bearings by persons on this side of the ocean who are interested in the welfare of working girls, and women interested in charitable works have expressed a willingness to provide wheels for working girls whose scant pay prevents them from buying them.

The plan was first suggested in England by Mrs. Fawcett, wife of the novelist, who communicated her idea to the lady riders of London, advising them, upon the purchase of new wheels, to give their old ones to the factory girls, through the various clubs and societies formed for their benefit. The plan came quickly across the water, and is now under serious consideration here in New York.

Rev. S. Parks Cadman had no prejudice against the use of the wheel, but on the contrary favored its use in moderation by either sex. He said he considered it a healthful and enjoyable means of exercise, and could see no reason why working girls should be deprived of its benefits. If the charitable people of New York would be good enough to provide them with wheels when they themselves have done with them.

Dr. Tolman, who is also connected with the Associated Charities, said: "I have heard of this plan, and of another which was to purchase a lot of wheels at reduced rates and retail them to wage-earners at cost prices, allowing them to pay a small amount of the purchase price each week. I can see no objection to this plan, but so far as I know the plan has not passed the incipient stage."

Miss Grace Dodge, well known for her interest in all matters pertaining to working girls, their clubs and institutions, states that in her opinion the principal objection to the plan would be the natural prejudice of the average American working girl to accept charity in any form. In her estimation it might be a good scheme for England, but it remains to be seen how it would work in this country.

MACHINE COURTESY.

An Incident Which Shows Just How Much a Certain Sort of Politeness is Worth.

The late General Sir Henry Ponsonby, Queen Victoria's private secretary, was noted for his courtesy, and whenever an artist performed at court he always telegraphed on the following day in the name of Her Majesty to inquire after the performer's health.

On one occasion Rogers Prat was sent for to Windsor to exhibit his trained geese before the royal grandchildren. The day following he received the traditional telegram from Sir Henry, who, it is needless to add, had not been present at the performance, and, of course, ignored the character of the artists.

It was couched in the customary form. "Her Gracious Majesty would be delighted to know if the members of your troupe are well, and if they have had an agreeable journey. For my own part I beg you to convey to them the expression of my highest regard and esteem."
